My worst trip ever

Coming back from Italy

My worst trip ever was from Italy last August. We were coming back from Rome by train. We set off early in the morning. First, we travelled from Rome to Venice, and then from Venice to Vienna. It took us fourteen hours.

We got on the first train, but after two hours, there was some problem, and the train stopped suddenly in the middle of nowhere. It was scorching because the air-conditioning was broken. We did not have enough water, so we had to buy some bottles of water on the train which were very expensive. After almost two hours of waiting, we moved on. Unfortunately, we missed our next train.

In Venice, we had to re-book our tickets for the next night train to Vienna. All the sleeping compartments were full because in August many Italians have holidays and they travel, too. To make things worse, I lost my mobile phone at the station. We went to a restaurant, and I left it on the table, but when we came back, it was not there. I started to cry. I was so frustrated. I shouted, "I hate Italy" and the people around me looked at me and said something I did not understand.

Fortunately, there was air-conditioning in the train to Vienna. In our compartment, there were six people. I tried to sleep, but I couldn't. I didn't have my mobile phone, so I couldn't listen to my favourite music or text my friends. Pure horror.
