A New Subject: Peace Education

The purpose of this report is to propose the introduction of a new school subject: Peace Education. Schools are constantly changing; old subjects are being removed and replaced by modern ones. Our suggestion is to implement a subject called Peace Education. In this report, we will discuss what exactly Peace Education is and why it is essential to introduce it to the school timetable.

Necessity for Peace Education

Peace Education is undeniably an important subject to be taught at schools. In a world with numerous ongoing wars and the signing of peace treaties, it is necessary to learn what peace means and how it can be achieved all around the globe. Peace is not only important on an international scale. It starts at homes and schools. Everyone faces multiple disputes with colleagues or friends from time to time. With peace education, students will be able to make the right choices to keep friendships going.

What Will Be Taught?

As already mentioned, a primary focus will be on living peacefully with each other. Additionally, this subject will also discuss current, as well as past international conflicts, peace treaties and international peace organizations. Students will learn about inner peace and what it takes to be a better person.

Problems with Peace Education?

There will undoubtedly be many problems with introducing a new subject that has never been taught before. Firstly, it will be difficult to find the right teachers who can talk about peace. Is a history teacher the right person, or a geography teacher? Perhaps a psychology teacher can teach about inner peace? Secondly, there will likely be parents who will be against the introduction of this new subject. It is crucial to convince them of how important Peace Education is and how much it can benefit their children.

Conclusions

The report has discussed the proposal for a new subject named Peace Education. In conclusion, the idea of introducing Peace Education as a subject is brilliant. With a dozen of topics to explore Peace Education will be a thought-provoking subject for parents, teachers and students alike.
