STUCK IN THE OUTBACK

Have you ever got stuck in the desert? This is exactly what happened to me and my friends during our stay in Australia last year.

We had heard so many interesting things about Australia before we landed there last year. We wanted to visit Sydney with its Harbour Bridge, and we had planned to go to Broome and ride camels at sunset at the gorgeous Cable Beach. But first we wanted to see the famous red rock called Ayers Rock, or Uluru, in the middle of the Australian desert called the Outback.

We set off early before sunrise. We packed our backpacks and water bottles in the jeep we had hired the day before. As we drove, we enjoyed the sunrise and we even spotted some kangaroos. I took many awesome pictures to post on my Instagram account. Suddenly the car started to make funny noises and, in the middle of nowhere, it stopped. "Here's the Outback" my friend shouted, "Enjoy the view". He tried to fix the car. We had simply run out of petrol and we had to wait for help.

We were lucky to have water. It was silent there and ... scary. We had no skills to survive in the desert. After three hours of waiting in the shade of our car, we saw a car coming towards us. The driver helped us and we could continue our trip.

I suppose I learnt one thing – the Outback can be a dangerous place for tourists.
